

‘Something out of Nothing’ from Sherri MacRaid

What you see in this picture is what a friend lovingly calls ‘laser poop’. I had someone laser-cut me a number of wheels and in order to use them, I first had to push out the stuff still hanging there between the spokes. You can see the shape for what it is now...right? Figured there HAD to be something I could use it for and kept these pieces in a little zip-loc baggie for a long time. Until Covid came along.

This probably should have been Part #1 but now, in the second photo, you can see the wheel where I got my ‘laser poop’ from. Notice I have started to prime these bits and pieces and then the next step was to paint them in various colours.

After using some left-over wire to make a tree and then figuring out how to make a tulip-looking pot out of cardstock...I wasn't finished yet. Needed some filler once the candy-corn tree was put in the pot so have to make some green jelly beans. And THEN, the whole thing was finished. Nothing purchased for this particular project...just a bunch of left-over materials and those laser bits.

So here it is....the Easter candy-corn tree. Was it worth it? Well...probably not what with the amount of hours involved, but what can I say....‘Covid made me do it!’.
